It is said that life imitates art. Why shouldn't food? Look no further. Our artisan, Pascal, has created upon his canvas of pastry a visceral provocation of the culinary senses that would melt the heart of the most constitutionally substantive aristocrat!

If you live your life to rehabilitate the old idea that what is unique and authentic can produce an aura of inherent respect, then you will also understand that food is not simply a means to an end. Sometimes, in order to exist more deliberately; to breathe deeper, one needs to spend a little more, eat a little less and live better.

If you want to know yourself with a richer heart, you have to find the time to wrap a little of your soul around this delightful work. Start with your lips. Go from there. Slowly.

Free of massification and commodification but rich in mouth-melting artistic fervour, the experience of Pascal's will renew your faith in the experience of life.

I'm from Quebec. I love food. I have scoured this wonderful city of ours for hours upon hours to find people who express themselves through their craft to celebrate a passion of deeper connections to who we are by how we eat. Dedicating his life to achieving that balance, Pascal is a gift to us from the south of France. I know what he has found. You need to find him.

You will not be disappointed.
Taste life again.
Live better.
Enjoy.
